Tax Deposit Rules for Small Businesses Simplified

December 7, 2004 --The Internal Revenue Service (IRS) announced last week that it will increase the minimum threshold for Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) deposits to $500. The threshold increase is expected to reduce the paperwork burden for over 4 million small businesses.

"The IRS is committed to reducing burden on taxpayers whenever we can," said IRS Commissioner Mark W. Everson in a statement. "The new rules will help cut paperwork for millions of small businesses. The IRS Office of Taxpayer Burden Reduction is continually reviewing what other steps we might take that will save money and time for businesses."

The new rules, which go into effect on January 1, 2005, will require employers to make quarterly deposits for unemployment taxes if the accumulated tax exceeds $500. Currently, employers are required to make quarterly deposits if the tax exceeds $100.

The most the IRS collects per employee from employers is $56 per year, if the employer has paid their state unemployment taxes in a timely manner. The current $100 threshold, established in 1970, requires businesses with two or more employees to make at least one federal tax deposit each year. Increasing the threshold to $500 reduces the burden for employers with eight employees or less by eliminating making FUTA tax deposits up to four times a year.

Small Business Optimism Gains (If You're an Optimist)

The first report, the Small Business Optimism Index, showed optimism matching a 30-year record in November. The index, based on a monthly survey of small-business owners conducted by the National Federation of Independent Business (NFIB), a not-for-profit advocacy group, climbed almost four points to 107.7. The NFIB attributed the increase to gains in three key index components: a 17 point spike among those who believe the economy will be better six months from now, a 13 point increase in the number who expect higher real sales in the next three months and a nine point boost in those who say now is a good time to expand.

"There was a surge in expectations, some of it probably due to the end of the election's uncertainty," said NFIB Chief Economist William Dunkelberg in the report.

The NFIB said that job creation in November reached the highest level ever recorded, with 18% of respondents reporting increasing employment while just 11% reported reductions. The number of firms planning to create new jobs rose four points to 19 percent. Inventory-accumulation plans also touched a 30-year record, according to the report, while optimism remained high regarding economic growth prospects in 2005. The share of companies planning to spend capital, however, fell four points to 30%.

Another report released by PricewaterhouseCoopers painted a less-rosy picture. That survey, based on interviews of CEOs at 355 of the fastest-growing privately held U.S. companies, found a drop in the percentage of respondents who were optimistic about the American economy's prospects over the next year. While domestic optimism fell, the report showed a surge in optimism regarding the world economy.

The report also found a sharp increase in respondents who cited weak market demand as a possible barrier to growth in the coming year.

"Weak demand is by far the greatest and fastest growing concern among 'trendsetter' CEOs," said Jay Mattie of PricewaterhouseCoopers in the report. "Certainly, abnormally high energy prices are a contributor, draining cash and creating a hesitation to make purchase decisions."

According to the report, plans for new hiring over the next 12 months dipped from the previous quarter but remained relatively high. The report found executives are holding steady in their plans for new capital investments, with 44% planning major new investments over the next year at an average spending level of 11.7% of revenues.
